Through the courtesy of a friend in this city, we have been permitted to make the following extracts from a very interesting private letter written on the late battle field of Fair Oaks:

written on the late battle field of Fair Oaks:

Williammung Roap.

Five miles from Richmond, June 5, 1862.

Daas Fairme: A ments the face, I received your kind letter. The regiment was then encamped near Hampton, where we had been lying idle two weeks. I intended to reply next day, but at eight o'clock the regiment was ordered to march for Yerktown. Since, we have been continually on the move, never halting more than twenty-four bours in one place.

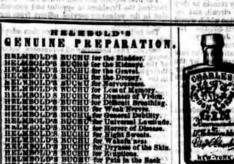

A short distance beyond Williamsburg we came up with the enemy, when our regiment was ordered on the advance, which position we now occupy. We have had a weigh time of it—plenty olywerk and very little rest. The whole regiment kept continually at work, driving in the enemy's pickets as the army advances, and furnishing videttes for outposts when the army rests. We get no rest.

All our baggage and tents are in the rear—one blanket, one coat poncho, a bag of oats or corn, tin cup, a little sugar, coffee, and crackers, and you are equipped for a three or four days scent, fighting the enomy through swamps and woods, horses often requiring the aid of men to extricate teem from the mire. We have killed, wounded, and taken prisoners, great numbers, with comparatively small loss. The rebels call us "iron-cased mounted sharpshootstill unburied. You cannot imagine a more revolting sight.

We are hourly expecting an attack, and our horses are saddled continually. Soaking raios and sleeping in ewampe, is bringing on an attack of rheumatism, but I mean to hold out till we take Richmond, which we are sure shortly to do. If my life is spared in the coming battle, I shall write you from Richmond.
Secesh prisoners are at a discount. Can't I send you a couple? I captured a fine looking Virginian yesterday.
Love to all friends.
Truly your friend,

Why is it that the 128th rule of the House of Representatives, devoting Friday and Saturday of each week to the consideration of private talms, is not regarded? The House uniformly adjourns over from Friday to Monday, and almost as uniformly devotes Friday to other business. Most of the bills on the private calendar are for the relief of poor men who have rendered military services, or experienced losses during the present war. The amounts are generally small, and the claimants and their families are subjected to much unnecessary suffering by this unreasonable delay. If the claims are just, let them be considered promptly, and as promptlet the supplementary of the considered promptly, and as promptlet. sponsible majority of the House to prompt adjustment of honest claim Government, than it would be for in out, than it would be for individ to shirk the payment of their private tions.
